STARGAZERS STARE AT SOLAR FLARE

Yesterday morning, stargazers and astronomers were gifted with a mind blowing display when increased solar activity enabled people in the Midlands and the North to experience a colourful phenomenon.

Citizens in rural areas and places where there was minimized light pollution could see the beautiful light much clearer. The grandview of the 'aurora borealis' occurs when there are eruptions on the face of the sun and when unforeseen activity has been strong. On Sunday (15/3/2015) tremendous explosions on the Sun created huge amounts of magnetically charged particles.

This spectacular display was a great warm-up for tomorrow's solar eclipse.
